Part travelogue, part scavenger hunt, Right Palm Up, Left Palm Down: The Log of a Cross-Country Scavenger Hunt is a humorous account of one man's cross-country quest to unravel the mysteries surrounding a type of 20-foot-tall fiberglass statue popularly, though misleadingly, known as the Muffler Man. Who made them, and when? How many were made, and for what purpose? How many are still out there?

Gabriel Aldaz had been curious ever since he was ten years old, when his family moved to Flagstaff, Arizona, and he encountered the statue of Louie the Lumberjack, Northern Arizona University's axe-wielding mascot. Years later, while a student at the University of Arizona, he spotted an identical statue in Tucson. A third sighting outside a run-down convenience store near Mecca (California) made it a trend. Thus began a scavenger hunt to discover the origins of Louie and his brethren.

In the name of the quest, Gabriel spent hours secluded in dimly lit libraries, played miniature golf at seedy boardwalks, consumed burgers at mediocre diners, drove the length of Route 66, and interviewed the artists, janitors, authors, homeless people, muffler shop owners, and other colorful characters interested in the fiberglass statues whose hands are held right palm up, left palm down.
