While an old enemy terrorizes the non-humans in the ancient city of Karlyle, nobles plot to eliminate a weak king, and the Overlord of the Underworld amasses power among the city's criminals.

Two courtesans have been brutally murdered in their beds and Kierstan Galliaire, the Madam of Kierstan's House of Pleasures, determines to investigate the cases because the City Watch won't concern itself with the death of common whores. Twenty five years ago twelve year-old Kierstan had to stand by as her father was killed and hear the Watch conclude that he was involved in a drug deal gone wrong. The young girl knew her father, a healer to the king, wouldn't trade in illegal and dangerous narcotics but no one would listen to a child. Now, she's a grown woman of power and poise and she's determined not to be ignored again.

To complicate the situation, Kierstan's old flame arrives unannounced with their son, a seventeen-year-old who she hasn't laid eyes on since he was born.. Torn between her present lover, an officer of the Watch, and her first love, who still kindles a conflagration in her heart, she has trouble concentrating on the search for the killer. But what use to find a killer when her future happiness is on a knife-edge of decision?

Death, sex, love, and political games that have been played for centuries all combine in this masterful tale by an experienced writer of Fantasy Romance.
