Love at Gunpowder Point Michael Walker

Brett Lyon needs an education. His life went from blissful to upside down in one day. Fourteen years from when he lost his mother, he loses his only ally, gets arrested and his ruthless father seeks to ruin him. Kelly Tatum can teach him a thing or two. She has been there. An emotional wound, however, preempts her from getting close.

A killdeer, a tiny yet noisy shorebird - its name comes from the two-note song it sings while courting and defending its territory – plays an important role in getting Kelly to trust Brett. Their love of nature brings them together. But their natures tear them apart. Kelly, weary of getting hurt again, pushes Brett away. Brett, ignorant about living in the real world, expects things to be easy. They have not figured out what everybody else already knows – they are meant for each other.

Brett and Kelly are our type of people though. They grow, learn, love and laugh while moving toward their goal of opening a world-class nature center at 888 Gunpowder Point. They need to work as one to defeat Brett's father who is intent on squashing their dream.

Working together heals Kelly's old wounds. Having a goal motivates Brett. While preparing for the showdown with his father, he learns how to live in the real world. Brett and Kelly go on a wild ride. Their love takes them to exotic locales and is put to the test. If Brett and Kelly co-exist long enough they just may pass the test.
